

Historical background

The hamlet of La Hoya constitutes one of the first human settlements of San Miguel de Abona due to the existence of three important springs: El Luchón, La Hoya and Tamaide. Nowadays, the hamlet is practically abandoned.

Natural features

The Ravines of El Lomo, Drago, Mantible. Springs of El Luchón, La Hoya, Tamaide. Montaña La Centinela (Sentry Mountain)
Flora: all sorts of indigenous species, e.g. Paris daisies, sweet and sour spurges, candle plants, balos (Plocama pendula).

Historical heritage

Tile furnace (late 19th century).
Traditional houses.

The track starts at the crossing of El Lomo, General Franco Street ①, with the Camino del Pilón on the left. This path still shows some of its original cobblestones and goes between stone walls and abandoned terraced fields which have been invaded by Paris daisies, sweet and sour spurges, lavender... You go on until you get to Barranco del Lomo. You cross it and start admiring beautiful views of the coastline of San Miguel, Granadilla and Arona, as well as the natural site of Roque de Jama.

You keep going for about 300 m.; at this point the track forks in two. You go to the right towards Barranco Drago. Cross it through its spurges and balos. Three important springs are to be found here: El Luchón, La Hoya and Tamaide.

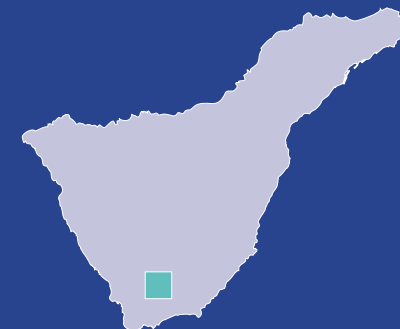

As you approach the hamlet of La Hoya, you get into a farming area, its terraced fields covered with a sand-based material called "jable" to retain humidity. You cross the paved road El Roque-Aldea Blanca and come back to the track well into the hamlet of La Hoya where you may see a very interesting tile furnace and traditional architecture.

Finally, as you leave La Hoya, you come to Barranco Mantible and head to La Centinela mountain, through a typical local vegetation until you get to view point of La Centinela ②, right on the boundary between the municipalities of San Miguel and Arona, on the side of the C-822 (km. 94 point), from where there is a dramatic view of the coast.
